Bulger greets those who could decide his future

Whitey trial. The jury selection process began yesterday.

Alleged mob boss James "Whitey" Bulger yesterday greeted the hundreds of people who will potentially decide his fate with a "good morning."

Bulger's attorney J.W. Carney Jr. gave a brief introduction of his client to the potential jurors who were called to the federal courthouse in South Boston.

"I'm pleased to introduce our client ... James Bulger," Carney said.

"Good morning," said Bulger.

"Good morning," the potential jurors responded.

That exchange ended the first of at least three sessions in which Judge Denise Casper introduced the potential jurors to the case.

James "Whitey" Bulger, to the hundreds of potential jurors

The jury pool was a mix of men and women of all ages and backgrounds. Many were reading books until prosecutors and defense lawyers walked in along with Bulger. One elderly man went back to reading his magazine and yawned shortly after Bulger walked into the jury assembly room.

The former fugitive, 83, appeared before them wearing a long-sleeved T-shirt tucked into his jeans. He does not have to wear his standard orange prison jumpsuit during his trial.

Hundreds of people filled out a questionnaire after Casper addressed them. Their answers will be reviewed by prosecutors and Bulger's defense team. Some of the candidates will be questioned later this week.

Casper repeatedly told the group that Bulger pleaded not guilty to the charges against him and that he is to be presumed innocent.

She also told them that just because they may have previously read something or heard something about Bulger, it doesn't mean they can't serve.

Lace 'em up. 'Run Now' social media campaign unites nation's runners

Run Now, a social media campaign by Boston's Brand Networks, has united a virtual community of runners from across the nation.

Thousands of people have pledged to run a collective 144,769 miles today, which is National Running Day, to honor the victims of the Boston Marathon terror attack. Massachusetts residents pledged to run 12,874 miles.

The campaign has also raised money for The One Fund Boston through the sale of blue and yellow Run Now bracelets.

Brand Networks CEO Jamie Tedford said the project offered the running community solidarity in the wake of the bombings.

"No matter where you are, you can say, 'I'm doing this.' Just find a group, or do a run on your own. We wanted people to feel connected to broader community," Tedford said.

Social media played a big role in uniting people around the globe; Twitter and Facebook were used to organize fundraisers.

"It seems like with every major tragedy that happens in this country, social media is the connective tissue when other means of communication aren't available," Tedford said. "It shows the true power of social media."

Survey: Forty percent of Mass. drivers distracted

Dangerous driving.
Nearly half of the state's drivers admit to texting while driving.

A survey released yesterday shows that nearly 40 percent of Massachusetts motorists send texts while driving.

Car insurance carrier Plymouth Rock Assurance polled 500 Bay State drivers, and found that despite warnings about distracted driving, 25 percent of motorists say they will not change their mobile device habits.

It's not all bad news — 96 percent of respondents said they wouldn't text while driving with a child in the car.

The findings were released the same day State Police announced a month-long campaign, "Text with One Hand, Ticket in The Other," which will allow officers to better enforce the Massachusetts Safe Driving Law in the month of June.

The law, which went into effect September 2010, bans the sending, typing or reading of electronic messages on a handheld devices while driving and prevents all cell phone use for teen drivers under the age of 18.

Supporting a suspect.
Alleged Boston bomber gets financial donations

People have been sending thousands of dollars to accused Boston bomber Dzhokhar Tsarnaev and his family, according the 19-year-old's mother.

"[Tsarnaev said:] 'Do not worry about me. I do have money. Somebody opened [an] account for me and people send me money here, and I do have lots of money,'" Zubediat Tsarnaeva said in an interview with ABC. "I'm like, 'How much is it?' [He said:] 'Thousand dollars.'"

The conversation happened during their first phone call from prison last week. Tsarnaeva also said her family has received $8,000 from individuals pledging their support.

When his mother asked if he is in pain, Tsarnaev replied in Russian: "No, of course not. I'm already eating and have been for a long time. They are giving me chicken and rice now, everything is fine."

The parents will be allowed one phone call per month while Tsarnaev awaits trial. The terror suspect was shot during a standoff with police days after he and his now-deceased brother Tamerlan, 26, allegedly set off two bombs near the finish line of the Boston Marathon. METRO

Tea Party groups emotionally describe harassment by IRS

Scrutiny. The House Ways and Means Committee invited groups to reveal their experiences.

Tea Party and other conservative groups delivered an emotional plea for Washington to rein in government overreach yesterday as they told lawmakers about how the Internal Revenue Service targeted them with relentless paperwork and intrusive questions when they sought tax-exempt status.

"This was not an accident. This is a willful act of intimidation intended to discourage a point of view," said Becky Gerritson, president of a Tea Party group in Wetumpka, Ala.

She tearfully described how she and her husband had to seek legal counsel when confronted with questionnaires about their donors, communications with legislators and their voter education activities.

"I'm not interested in scoring political points. I want to protect and preserve the America I grew up in," Gerritson said.

Multiple congressional committees and the Department of Justice have opened probes into the matter.

They are trying to determine if the IRS had a political agenda in subjecting these groups to extra scrutiny, or if workers in the tax-exempt division chose partisan criteria as a way to cope with a flood of applications starting in 2010.

Current and former officials have defended IRS employees by saying they were given the challenging task of determining the level of political activity among 501(c)(4) groups. REUTERS

WHY YOU NEED PHYSICAL GOLD OR SILVER IN YOUR IRA OR 401(k)

With the uncertainty in the U.S. stock market and global economies, you've probably been hearing a lot about the idea of adding physical gold and silver to your investment portfolio, especially to your existing IRA or a 401(k) from a previous employer.

But how do you go about transferring a portion of your IRA or rolling over an old 401(k) into actual physical gold and silver coins and bars? That's where American Bullion comes in.

"It's actually a very simple and rather quick process, and we've helped thousands of people roll over or transfer their retirement accounts into precious metals," explained Jon Nelson, a spokesperson with American Bullion.

"We have a safe and simple in-house system in place that's hassle-free and 100 percent tax-free."

Nelson also noted to not be discouraged or surprised if your financial advisor tries to steer you away from owning physical gold or has never recommended it.

"Typically, advisors don't earn ongoing commissions when you invest in physical precious metals," said Nelson.

"Our clients often comment on how safe they feel now and how easy it was to become an owner of gold," said American Bullion's Nelson.

"After all, gold has been preserving wealth for centuries, and whether you look long-term or short-term, you'll see that it's exactly the kind of uncertainty that exists in today's economy that increases the demand for gold."

Explosion. Possible natural gas blast on New York college campus

A possible natural gas explosion blew out windows of a historic building at Nyack College north of New York City yesterday, injuring seven faculty members, a Rockland County sheriff's spokesman said.

"The whole first floor got blown out — shrapnel and glass flew everywhere," William Barbera, chief of the sheriff's patrol, said.

After the explosion, which occurred at about noon, fire and bomb investigators rushed to the campus in Nyack, about 30 miles north of New York City.

Members of the Orange and Rockland Utilities, which is owned by Con Edison, also were on the scene to shut off the gas, Barbera said. REUTERS

U.S. military chiefs endure grilling over sexual assault

Sexual assaults. The hearing comes after a wave of scandals and new Pentagon data showing a steep rise in cases of unwanted sexual contact within the military.

Lawmakers admonished America's leading military officers yesterday over sexual assault in the armed forces, but top brass warned against a plan in Congress to take the cases out of the hands of commanders.

The Senate hearing comes after a wave of sexual assault scandals and new Pentagon data showing a steep rise in unwanted sexual contact, from groping to rape, that have deeply embarrassed the military chain of command and prompted lawmakers to try to impose change with new legislation.

"You have lost the trust of the men and women who rely on you that you will actually bring justice in these cases," said Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, a New York Democrat.

Sen. John McCain, a Republican from Arizona, said he could not "overstate [his] disgust and disappointment" over the continued reports of sexual misconduct.

The top uniformed officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force and Coast Guard sat in a line, listening silently, as did the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

They objected to Gillibrand's proposal, which would take responsibility for prosecuting sex crimes out of the victim's chain of command altogether and be given to special prosecutors. REUTERS

Giving voice to the unheard

Theater. Boston Conservatory's "Shelter" explores homelessness.

"Shelter" aims to bring awareness to the plight of homeless women. / STOCKPHOTO

Boston Conservatory's "Shelter" gives voice to a subset of women not often heard in our society, let alone a pop-rock musical: members of the homeless community.

"The more we explored these characters, the more we wanted it to see where they came from, and what they would do," says Brittany Bullen, one of the show's creators.

The musical centers around Jeanine, a counselor at a women's shelter in New York City, and follows the stories of the women she meets.

Bullen wrote the book, lyrics and music for the show, which took a lot of research.

"We visited shelters, talked to people who had been homeless, to people whose family members had been homeless and to counselors," she says.

Professionals who work with the homeless attended the show's first reading, vetting the script before the show was produced.

"I always assumed that all homeless people are the ones you see on street corners panhandling," she says. "But these people are rarely taking advantage of the resources like shelters that are available. Those in shelters are often homeless only temporarily."

Raising awareness and funds for the homeless is a goal for the "Shelter" team.

"In communities where the homeless are taken care of well, they really can see some change and turn their lives around," says Bullen.

Home hunting at this time of year is an unpleasant endeavor for buyers and renters alike. It seems like everyone and their mother is interested in the same space and beating you to it — whether in terms of price or literally arriving at a showing first. Add Boston's temporary seasonal residents — summer-term professors and students enrolled in summer programs — to the mix, and the apartment hunt becomes even more torturous. That's where Furnished Quarters comes in. This short-term apartment rental company, headquartered in Central Square, leases fully-furnished studio and one- and two-bedroom apartments for 30-, 60- or 90-day terms. Right now, with the spring real estate market on the rise, the company's business is booming.

"The tight market is definitely having an effect on our business, too," says Annette Clement, Executive Vice President and GM. "People who are home hunting, or even renovating, are using us until they find or finish their homes. May to November is our busiest time anyway. In the summer, what with MIT, Harvard and the Sloane School, and visiting professors and summer programs, we are at our peak."

Furnished Quarters fills a niche market for those who are in search of a place that falls somewhere between a hotel room and a rented apartment, cutting the cost of the former and the long-term contract of the latter. They offer high-end apartments that come complete with everything you'd want in your own home — from towels to throw rugs, as well as complimentary Wi-Fi, cable television and unlimited local telephone service. What's more, their digs are rather stylish.

"For visitors, it's the best way to experience the city because you're living next door to a local, not another visitor," says Clement. "It feels more like you really live here."

When Free Isn't Really Free

By Attorney George Warshaw

Last week I answered the question whether a buyer needs his or her own attorney at a real estate closing. There is a related question. Can your attorney also represent the mortgage lender as well?

In Massachusetts, attorneys are permitted with the client's consent to have a dual role in the purchase of a home or condo. The attorney may represent the buyer and the buyer's mortgage lender as well.

While there are many advantages to this dual role for the buyer, a word of caution is needed.

Some attorneys will offer to charge a very low fee or no fee for "looking over" the purchase and sale agreement if the buyer allows the attorney to also represent the lender.

When an attorney charges little or nothing one has to ask, "why?"

Too often in real estate the attorney is more interested in getting the lender's business than in paying attention to yours.

Frankly, a purchase and sale agreement is not a standard form that requires little or no legal input. It requires attention to the details and often, a lot of details.

Here's my suggestion: treat your home as a major life-time investment of your cash. Select an attorney who charges a fair fee and is concerned with your interests. That's my opinion. © 2013 George Warshaw.

Meet 'the iPad of vacuum cleaners': AirRam

Household. Gtech introduces a cordless, battery-powered model for your home.

Forget unpacking a heavy vacuum, unwinding the cord and plugging it in the next time you spill a few measly chips or need to get the cat hair off your couch. Gtech's new vacuum is determined to make your life easier.

"Floor care has to go cordless — the vacuum is the only product we drag around room-to-room with a cable," says Nick Grey, founder of the British design firm and inventor of the new device.

His solution is the AirRam, a sleek lightweight unit that runs on a rechargeable Lithium Ion batter that lasts up to 40 minutes and "is powerful enough to clean a four-bedroom home."

Impressive, but it gets better. The AirRam is 20 times more energy-efficient than most vacuums. And it can be hooked up to your computer via a USB cable to find out information like how many calories you've burned during the chore and how much power you've saved.

"We try and make the product very smart," says Grey. "It's a bit ambitious to [call it] the iPad of vacuum cleaners, but it's got one button. And you press your button, and whatever you push [it] over, it will clean well. It's very simple."

Since vacuuming isn't our favorite household activity we asked Grey some essentials:

How often should people vacuum?
"It's not necessary to clean more than once a week unless you've got a really busy home."

What are the benefits of vacuuming, not sweeping?
"Sweeping, if you've got mostly hard floors, is very convenient. You'd better have a pretty good vacuum to beat [a broom] on hard floors. The advantage to using a vacuum is there's less airborne dirt; it all goes in and is contained. There are also no bristles, which can get dirty. The dust won't blow up in the air, it will get sucked up inside."

Saving power

Why it's so energy-efficient

The AirRam uses just 100 watts of power. "[That's] about a 10th of what your normal corded uprights use," says Grey. He says this is due to its short dirt path. Instead of shooting dirt up into a bag or canister, the vacuum collects dirt and dust into compact "bales" that you then empty into your trash can.

Find. Eat. Drink.

System: iOS
Price: Free
Genre: Dining, boozing

Yelpers can be terrible: uninformed, shortsighted, obsessed with how they're treated over how they're fed. The world doesn't need another restaurant app — or maybe not one run on the word of everyday patrons. Enter Find. Eat. Drink., which is fueled by those in the know — chefs, bartenders, sommeliers.

FED is already running in cities all over the States, as well as in parts of France and Spain. Its list of informers is a nice mix of the obscure and the world-famous. Of course, you still have to take recommendations with a grain of salt (sorry). Restaurateurs aren't always the most objective when it comes to talking about friends. And they aren't always the most eloquent writers. Sometimes you're just stuck with Marcus Samuelsson saying, of Little Italy's Banh Mi Saigon, "I love their banh mi sandwiches" — although that's probably all that needs to be said.

iSwap Faces

System: iOS
Price: $1.99

There's a scene in the almost certainly forgotten film of Michael Crichton's "Rising Sun" where a techie takes a video of Sean Connery and Wesley Snipes and swaps their faces. Magic! And because this is the future, anyone with a spare $2 can do almost the same thing on their phone.

With iSwap Faces, users can take a photo and easily move one face over to another. The juxtaposition is scarily smooth, thanks to the ability to customize the size of each face, and then fine-tune it so that friends, family or strangers look like horrific freaks. A fine time-suck will get even better once people start applying it to historical photos. Forget embarrassing your friends — just wait until someone puts Joe DiMaggio's face on Marilyn Monroe's body, and vice versa.

What you should know about GMOs

Health. It's a controversial topic. Here are the facts.

It's hard to get 91 percent of Americans to agree on anything, but one thing 91 percent of us do agree on is that genetically modified foods should be labeled as such. Genetically modified organisms (GMOs) are crops made with DNA from foreign species — think taking DNA from an eel and inserting it into salmon to make it larger (which, by the way, is a reality today).

Genetically engineered crops have been in the U.S. since the mid-1990s, says Britt Lundgren, the director of Organic & Sustainable Agriculture at Stonyfield Farm, Inc., which is behind the Just Label It movement to create a label similar to the organic label for GMOs. What started as a means of enhancing crops like corn, cotton, soy and canola in the U.S. is now the way the majority of some crops are produced. For example, 93 percent of the soy that we grow now is genetically engineered, as is 90 percent of our corn. "We're really heavily investing in this without letting folks know that this is a part of their diets," Lundgren says.

Detractors of GMOs argue that their health risks are not known to us. "If you're allergic to eel and you eat this [genetically modified] salmon, are you going to react?" asks Lundgren. Though the FDA argues that genetically modified products are safe to eat, others beg to differ. Bt toxin, an insecticide in some GMO corn, has shown up in the bloodstreams of 93 percent of pregnant women and 80 percent of their fetuses, according to GMO-Free NY.

But some think GMOs aren't all that bad. The biotech industry claims that genetically engineered foods help feed the world and reduce hunger. And some scientists aren't convinced that the process is all that radical.

"Genetic engineering is not all that different from conventional plant breeding," says Dr. Walter De Jong, an associate professor of plant breeding and genetics at Cornell University. He says that when crops are conventionally bred, they undergo a great deal of change anyway. "There is this widespread concern that [adding] a gene by genetic engineering is really messing with nature," he adds. "In terms of the scale of what's happened, the amount of change that we've introduced is quite small."

And in terms of health risks, he says that "the biotech industry is well aware" about allergen concerns, and that safety testing is done to determine potential allergen introductions. "After that," he adds, "the concerns are almost for the most part not supported by mainstream science."

Some retailers are starting to make changes so that their consumers know just what it is they're buying. Whole Foods recently announced that by 2018 they will require labeling for all foods in their stores. And Whole Foods, Trader Joe's and Wegmans have agreed to not carry the aforementioned genetically engineered salmon.

More than 60 countries require labeling for GMOs, according to Just Label It. / DIGITAL VISION

Labels

Don't want 'em? Sign the petition

The Just Label It petition launched in 2011 to push the U.S. Food and Drug Administration to identify GMOs like they already do organic products. Since its creation, over 1 million Americans have signed the petition letter urging leaders to make a change.

You can learn more about why celebs like Michael J. Fox and Chevy Chase are involved in the cause, and sign the petition yourself, at www.justlabelit.org.

How to spot a GMO

- Check the label. "The organic regulations prohibit the use of GMOs, so anything with an organic label will have been produced without GMOs," Lundgren says.
- Check the number. Is your produce's sticker a five-digit number starting with eight? It's a GMO. Four-digit numbers mean a product was conventionally made. Five-digit numbers beginning with nine mean it's organic.
- Check the logo. Look for a little butterfly symbol on packaged foods — it's the mark of the Non-GMO Project, a third-party verification system.

Look of the Month – Cheerleader Blowout

This month's look is the cheerleader blowout; Dellaria Salons is the official sponsor of the New England Patriots Cheerleaders, and is responsible for those voluminous, bouncy, peppy curls you see on the sidelines of game day! This glamorous look is easily achievable with the right products and technique. We'll show you how to master the cheerleader blowout at home – or stop by your local Dellaria Salon for best results!

The tools you will need for this look are:

- A light hairspray /volumizing spray
- A 1-inch curling iron
- Pin curl clips

Start with day-old dry hair (dirty hair can hold a curl best). Spray all over with a light setting volumizing spray, making sure all hair is prepped & protected. (Lisa F of our Danvers location recommends Framesi's FHTL Volume Thermal Spray).

Clip half of your hair up so you can work on the bottom half of your head first.

Start curling your hair in one to one-and-a-half inch sections away from your face. Make sure you are positioning each curl so that the hair is curling away for your face – this is much more flattering on all face shapes! After each curl, wind the curl back up and pin it to your head with a pin curl clip. This allows your hair to cool in place and set, which will aid in maintaining a nice wave. Continue this for the entire bottom half of your head.

Unpin the top section and repeat the curl & pin process for the rest of your hair. Remember, curl away from your face.

When finished, allow all curls to cool in their pins. (Now's the time to put on your makeup, paints your toes, read a magazine…)

Take all clips out (slowly & carefully) and comb through the curls – this gives a softer, natural & wavy look, and takes away that "Shirley Temple" curl.

Once complete, spray all over with a light hairspray (Lisa recommends Framesi's BY light mist hairspray).

This look can be achieved with the finest of hair, as long as you use the right product! Start with Biogenol Ultra Body shampoo by Framesi and use conditioner sparingly, only on the ends of your hair.

Brought to you by the professionals at Dellaria Salons.

Don't like it, don't read it

Re: "'Sex Issue a death knell for greatness'" (Metro, June 4) I wish I could say I was sorry for the readers whose value system was offended by the Metro "Sex Issue," but frankly if it offends you then you should pay for a paper that caters to your value system and quit acting hurt by a free paper.

The rest of us, who realize and embrace sex and creation as very good when done right, will keep reading about sex and keep enjoying the Metro. Also, thanks, Metro, for talking about something so many of us enjoy!

Our great nation was not only built by those with "Judeo-Christian values," but also through the sweat and toil of atheists, Africans, Buddhists, Muslims, Hindus and more than a few sex-positive free-thinkers! That's the definition of a melting pot.

A slippery slope toward Saturnalia

Re: "'Sex Issue a death knell for greatness'" (Metro, June 4) I have to agree with letter writer Daniel Sullivan. Metro has the potential to lift people to a higher level and assist them in forming opinions that ultimately will be beneficial to all of society and thus the human race. Spreading manure by focusing on values that have caused other civilizations to deteriorate and fall is not the way to go. Shape up!

Pittsburgh's Joe Vitale gets knocked into Tuukka Rask and Adam McQuaid in the Bruins' Game 2 win Monday night. / GREGORY SHAMUS, GETTY IMAGES

Pens far from mighty heading into Game 3

NHL playoffs. The Penguins have already become the brunt of jokes heading into tonight's Game 3.

From a distance, the Pittsburgh Penguins look nearly unbeatable. They are a game of NHL '13 come to life. Perhaps no other team in the NHL can match their collection of world-class talent with players like Sidney Crosby, Evgeni Malkin, Jarome Iginla, Kris Letang, etc. However, after watching the Penguins lose the first two games of the 2013 Eastern Conference Finals at home to the Bruins (3-0 and 6-1), you start to see the numerous warts on Pittsburgh and the reasons why it lost in the first round the past two seasons.

Boston will never match Pittsburgh's skill level but that doesn't matter since the B's have bought into an outstanding system that allows everyone to play a specific role. If the Penguins stars aren't scoring goals, what exactly is their role?

The Bruins have done a brilliant job exposing the Penguins main weaknesses in shaky defensemen, forwards that don't want to play two ways and goaltenders that are easily rattled. It only took two periods in Game 1 to see how much Crosby and Malkin were out of their element as the former bumped Tuukka Rask and the latter fought Patrice Bergeron in a misguided attempt to fire up his team.

The Pens have plenty of physical players, so they can employ that style to a point. But their numerous attempts to intimidate Boston have been muted for the most part.

The only statistic that the Penguins have a decided advantage in so far are hits: they've outhit the Bruins 71-38. Pittsburgh has been so focused on taking the body that their defensemen have taken themselves out of plays or even worse, coughed up the puck in key areas (20 giveaways this series to Boston's 3), which has led to a bunch of goals for the B's.

Everyone is waiting for Pittsburgh to change gears in Game 3 tonight (8, NBCSN) and to start racking up the goals. The problem is that the Bruins aren't the Islanders and they aren't the Senators. They have a game plan, a dependable roster and they're not intimidated one bit by the Penguins.
